

DROPPED TO HIS DEATH.

A Trapeze Performer Falls From the Ceiling to the Floor.

A Terrible Scene in a Minneapolis Theater—A Dead Fall of Nearly Forty Feet—Almost Instant Death.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 18.—A thrilling accident occurred at the Pence Opera-house last night about 9:30 o'clock, during the regular performance that has been running there the past week. The show is of the variety order, and among the actors was a trapeze performer called La Haire on the walls. His business consisted of a number of perilous acts on the trapeze, among which was what is known as "ceiling walking." A number of rings are attached to the ceiling down the front part of the auditorium, and the performer, hanging by these with his feet, with his head downward, travels across the hall. La Haire had nearly finished his act last night, and was about half way across the ceiling on his perilous trip when one of the swivels by which the rings are fastened to the ceiling broke, and he shot downward like a bolt, his head striking one of the iron arms of a seat. He was picked up and carried behind the stage, when it was discovered that his skull was fractured and his neck broken. Dr. Auer was called at once, who made a hasty examination and ordered the unfortunate man to be taken to his lodgings at the Keller House. Further examination there showed that he struck on his head, just over the left eye, producing a fracture of the skull, which extended to the back of his head. His neck was also broken, but not dislocated. His injuries were such that he could not possibly recover, and nothing could possibly be done for him. The distance from the ceiling to the floor of the Opera House is nearly forty feet, and he struck the seat with such violence as to break the heavy iron arm. His body fell shot downward, was perfectly rigid, and the scene was frightful. The audience, which was not large, was paralyzed for a moment and several ladies nearly fainted, but no panic ensued. The orchestra struck up and a few moments later the performance was going on as usual. A few people left the house, but the majority remained until the show was over. Last night's fall was the third he has experienced during the past two years. About a year and a half ago, while performing in Indianapolis, a portion of the ceiling gave way and he fell on his head. He was unconscious for three days and did not recover for several weeks. Two months ago at St. Louis he missed his footing and fell to the floor, sustaining slight injuries only. His comrades may be as nervous as the work here, and to use the expression of one of them, "was leary of the business" all the time. Before going on last night he spoke to one of the company, remarking, "If I get through tonight all right I will be glad of it, but I feel that something is going to happen."
